

Overview:

My website, Carolina Compass, will showcase various destinations around South Carolina, inspiring visitors to explore scenic landmarks and historic sites. The current plan is to have a Home page with an interactive map of cities/towns, a Destinations page featuring detailed information such as the significance and photos of each location, and a Feedback page for users to share questions, comments, or suggestions about destinations or site improvements.

Home Page and Graphics:

Based on the wireframe design of my website, the navigation bar will be at the top of every page with the logo on the left side, and the links to the other webpages on the right.

Here's two variants of the logo, one for dark backgrounds and one for light backgrounds:

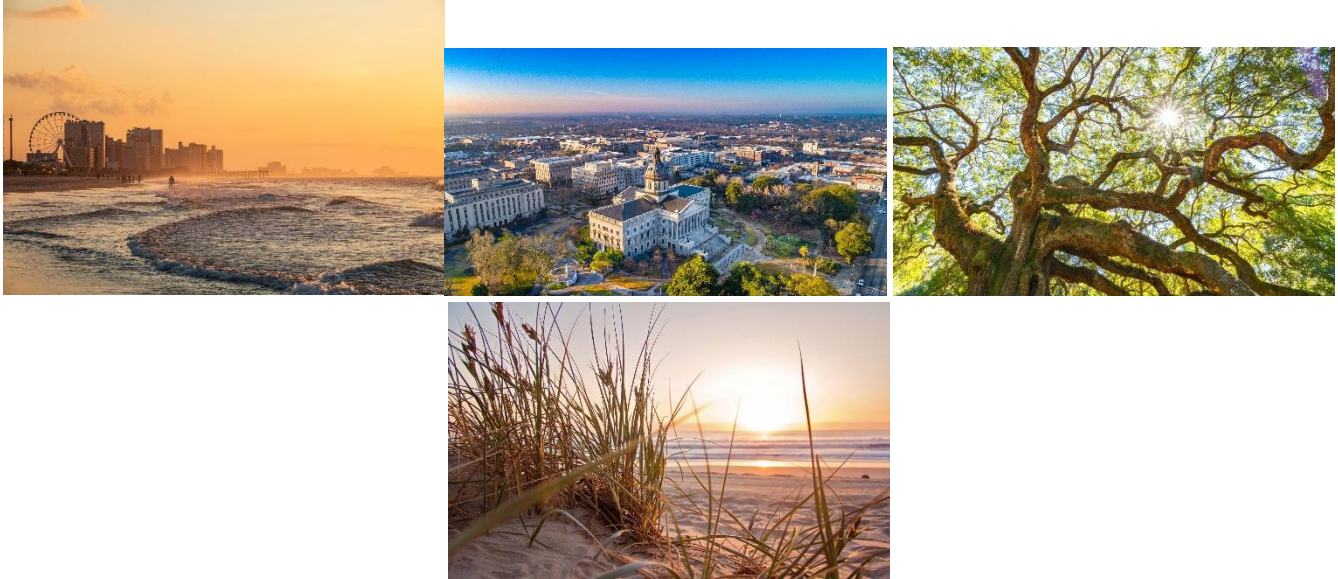

I made the logo in Figma, and the compass symbol came from Vecteezy.

(<https://www.vecteezy.com/vector-art/552580-navigation-travel-compass>)

The top of the home page will have a banner image that will have text overlaying it saying, "Welcome to Carolina Compass!" I've put a few pictures below that I might use for the banner image (it will either just be one of the pictures or I might have it rotate through them). Below the banner will be a call-to-action paragraph saying, "Welcome to Carolina Compass, your guide to exploring South Carolina. Whether you're a tourist or a local, this website highlights popular and historic destinations across the state. Discover the history, significance, and landmarks of each region, and browse through different photos of these locations. Use the map below to choose a place and learn more!" For the interactive map, I'm currently planning to use a tool such as Leaflet or Google My Maps; however, I'll explore those options more when I actually start building the website.

Destinations Page:

The top of this page has “Destinations” as the header. Below this header, I have sections for all four of the different locations that I’m covering. Each section will have the description and information for each place, multiple pictures (this will either be an image carousel that you can click through or a link that takes you to a page with an image gallery for that location), and the current weather for that location in an embed/iframe.

Place 1 (Beaufort/Parris Island):

These historic Lowcountry coastal regions showcase the beauty of South Carolina. Beaufort’s scenic historic downtown features unique architecture, well-preserved homes, and live oak trees draped in Spanish moss. The area offers excellent dining, with some of the best fresh seafood in the state. With its slow pace and welcoming Southern culture, it is a great place to unwind and take in the surroundings. Just next door, Parris Island is home to one of only two Marine Corps recruit training bases in the country.

Place 2 (Kings Mountain National Military Park):

While South Carolina is known for its coastal destinations like Hilton Head, Charleston, and Myrtle Beach, the Upstate region has its own mountain landscapes to explore. Kings Mountain National Military Park, located in the Upstate, marks the site of a key 1780 Revolutionary War battle where Patriot militia defeated Loyalist forces, a conflict that divided communities and even families. Visitors can hike trails that pass through rolling hills and dense forests, especially colorful in the fall. Next to the park, Kings Mountain State Park offers fishing, camping, and equestrian trails. The area combines history and outdoor activities, making it a great spot for both history enthusiasts and nature lovers.

Place 3 (Sullivan's Island):

Sullivan's Island, located in the Lowcountry at the entrance of Charleston Harbor, is known for its beaches and historical significance. The island's wide sandy shores provide a quiet place to relax or spend time by the water admiring the ships guided by the "Charleston Light." Fort Moultrie offers a look into early American defense and was active during the Civil War. Just across the water in Mount Pleasant, Patriots Point features the USS Yorktown, a retired aircraft carrier now serving as a museum. The island is also home to Poe's Tavern, a popular restaurant named after Edgar Allan Poe. With its coastal scenery and historical sites, Sullivan's Island is a great place to visit.

Place 4 (Columbia):

Columbia, the capital of South Carolina and home to the University of South Carolina Gamecocks, combines history and culture with modern attractions. Visitors can explore Main Street and The Vista, where shops, restaurants, and historic sites line the streets. The city also features popular spots like the Riverbanks Zoo & Garden and the South Carolina State Museum. The University of South Carolina not only brings history to the city with the Horseshoe and the country's oldest free-standing library, but also energy, especially during football season when fans gather to support the Gamecocks at Williams-Brice Stadium. With its walkable streets and variety of activities, Columbia is a place that offers something for everyone.

Feedback Page:

At the top of the feedback page will be a paragraph discussing the reason to fill out the form:

“Have feedback or questions? Use the form below to share your thoughts! Whether you have a question about a destination, a comment on the site, or suggestions for improvements, your input is welcome. Let us know how we can make Carolina Compass better for you!”

Here’s the current layout I have planned for the feedback form:
